Reference for a preliminary ruling – Court of Appeal (Civil Division) – Interpretation of Article 10(1) of Protocol No 10 to the Act of Accession of Cyprus and of Articles 22, 34(1) and (2) and 35(1) of Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (OJ 2001 L 12, p. 1) – Suspension of the application of the acquis communautaire in those areas in which the Government does not exercise effective control – Recognition and enforcement by the court of another Member State of a decision given by a Cypriot court sitting in the area of effective control and relating to land situated outside that area.

Operative part of the judgment

The suspension of the application of the acquis communautaire in those areas of the Republic of Cyprus in which the Government of that Member State does not exercise effective control, provided for by Article 1(1) of Protocol No 10 on Cyprus to the Act concerning the conditions of accession [to the European Union] of the Czech Republic, the Republic of Estonia, the Republic of Cyprus, the Republic of Latvia, the Republic of Lithuania, the Republic of Hungary, the Republic of Malta, the Republic of Poland, the Republic of Slovenia and the Slovak Republic and the adjustments to the Treaties on which the European Union is founded, does not preclude the application of Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters to a judgment which is given by a Cypriot court sitting in the area of the island effectively controlled by the Cypriot Government, but concerns land situated in areas not so controlled.

Article 35(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 does not authorise the court of a Member State to refuse recognition or enforcement of a judgment given by the courts of another Member State concerning land situated in an area of the latter State over which its Government does not exercise effective control. The fact that a judgment given by the courts of a Member State, concerning land situated in an area of that State over which its Government does not exercise effective control, cannot, as a practical matter, be enforced where the land is situated does not constitute a ground for refusal of recognition or enforcement under Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 and it does not mean that such a judgment is unenforceable for the purposes of Article 38(1) of that regulation.

The recognition or enforcement of a default judgment cannot be refused under Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 where the defendant was able to commence proceedings to challenge the default judgment and those proceedings enabled him to argue that he had not been served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with the equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence.

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation, first, of Protocol No 10 on Cyprus to the Act concerning the conditions of accession [to the European Union] of the Czech Republic, the Republic of Estonia, the Republic of Cyprus, the Republic of Latvia, the Republic of Lithuania, the Republic of Hungary, the Republic of Malta, the Republic of Poland, the Republic of Slovenia and the Slovak Republic and the adjustments to the Treaties on which the European Union is founded (OJ 2003 L 236, p. 955) ('Protocol No 10') and, second, certain aspects of Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (OJ 2001 L 12, p. 1).

- 2 The reference was made in the course of proceedings between Mr Apostolides, a Cypriot national, and Mr and Mrs Orams, a British married couple ('the Orams'), concerning the recognition and enforcement in the United Kingdom, under Regulation No 44/2001, of two judgments given by the Eparkhiako Dikastirio tis Lefkosias (District Court, Nicosia) (Cyprus).

Legal background

Community law

Protocol No 10

- 3 Protocol No 10 is worded as follows:

'THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES,

REAFFIRMING their commitment to a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem, consistent with relevant United Nations Security Council Resolutions, and their strong support for the efforts of the United Nations Secretary General to that end,

CONSIDERING that such a comprehensive settlement to the Cyprus problem has not yet been reached,

CONSIDERING that it is, therefore, necessary to provide for the suspension of the application of the acquis in those areas of the Republic of Cyprus in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise effective control,

CONSIDERING that, in the event of a solution to the Cyprus problem this suspension shall be lifted,

CONSIDERING that the European Union is ready to accommodate the terms of such a settlement in line with the principles on which the E[uropean] U[nion] is founded,

CONSIDERING that it is necessary to provide for the terms under which the relevant provisions of E[uropean] U[nion] law will apply to the line between the abovementioned areas and both those areas in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus exercises effective control and the Eastern Sovereign Base Area of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland,

DESIRING that the accession of Cyprus to the European Union shall benefit all Cypriot citizens and promote civil peace and reconciliation,

CONSIDERING, therefore, that nothing in this Protocol shall preclude measures with this end in view,

CONSIDERING that such measures shall not affect the application of the acquis under the conditions set out in the Accession Treaty in any other part of the Republic of Cyprus,

HAVE AGREED UPON THE FOLLOWING PROVISIONS:

Article 1

1. The application of the acquis shall be suspended in those areas of the Republic of Cyprus in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise effective control.

2. The Council, acting unanimously on the basis of a proposal from the Commission, shall decide on the withdrawal of the suspension referred to in paragraph 1.

Article 2

1. The Council, acting unanimously on the basis of a proposal from the Commission, shall define the terms under which the provisions of European Union law shall apply to the line between those areas referred to in Article 1 and the areas in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus exercises effective control.

2. The boundary between the Eastern Sovereign Base Area and those areas referred to in Article 1 shall be treated as part of the external borders of the Sovereign Base Areas for the purpose of Part IV of the Annex to the Protocol on the Sovereign Base Areas of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Cyprus for the duration of the suspension of the application of the acquis according to Article 1.

Article 3

1. Nothing in this Protocol shall preclude measures with a view to promoting the economic development of the areas referred to in Article 1.

2. Such measures shall not affect the application of the acquis under the conditions set out in the Accession Treaty in any other part of the Republic of Cyprus.

Article 4

In the event of a settlement, the Council, acting unanimously on the basis of a proposal from the Commission, shall decide on the adaptations to the terms concerning the accession of Cyprus to the European Union with regard to the Turkish Cypriot Community.'

Regulation No 44/2001

4 Recitals 16 to 18 in the preamble to Regulation No 44/2001 state:

'(16) Mutual trust in the administration of justice in the Community justifies judgments given in a Member State being recognised automatically without the need for any procedure except in cases of dispute.

(17) By virtue of the same principle of mutual trust, the procedure for making enforceable in one Member State a judgment given in another must be efficient and rapid. To that end, the declaration that a judgment is enforceable should be issued virtually automatically after purely formal checks of the documents supplied, without there being any possibility for the court to raise of its own motion any of the grounds for non-enforcement provided for by this Regulation.

(18) However, respect for the rights of the defence means that the defendant should be able to appeal in an adversarial procedure, against the declaration of enforceability, if he considers one of the grounds for non-enforcement to be present. Redress procedures should also be available to the claimant where his application for a declaration of enforceability has been rejected.'

5 Article 1(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 provides:

'This Regulation shall apply in civil and commercial matters whatever the nature of the court or tribunal. It shall not extend, in particular, to revenue, customs or administrative matters.'

6 Under Article 2 of that regulation:

'1. Subject to this Regulation, persons domiciled in a Member State shall, whatever their nationality, be sued in the courts of that Member State.

2. Persons who are not nationals of the Member State in which they are domiciled shall be governed by the rules of jurisdiction applicable to nationals of that State.'

7 Article 22(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, in Section 6, entitled 'Exclusive jurisdiction', of Chapter II thereof, provides:

'The following courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction, regardless of domicile:

1. in proceedings which have as their object rights in rem in immovable property or tenancies of immovable property, the courts of the Member State in which the property is situated.

However, in proceedings which have as their object tenancies of immovable property concluded for temporary private use for a maximum period of six consecutive months, the courts of the Member State in which the defendant is domiciled shall also have jurisdiction, provided that the tenant is a natural person and that the landlord and the tenant are domiciled in the same Member State'.

8 Article 34 of Regulation No 44/2001 states:

'A judgment shall not be recognised:

1. if such recognition is manifestly contrary to public policy in the Member State in which recognition is sought;

2. where it was given in default of appearance, if the defendant was not served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence, unless the defendant failed to commence proceedings to challenge the judgment when it was possible for him to do so;

3. if it is irreconcilable with a judgment given in a dispute between the same parties in the Member State in which recognition is sought;

4. if it is irreconcilable with an earlier judgment given in another Member State or in a third State involving the same cause of action and between the same parties, provided that the earlier judgment fulfils the conditions necessary for its recognition in the Member State addressed.'

9 Article 35 of the regulation states:

'1. Moreover, a judgment shall not be recognised if it conflicts with Sections 3, 4 or 6 of Chapter II, or in a case provided for in Article 72.

2. In its examination of the grounds of jurisdiction referred to in the foregoing paragraph, the court or authority applied to shall be bound by the findings of fact on which the court of the Member State of origin based its jurisdiction.

3. Subject to ... paragraph 1, the jurisdiction of the court of the Member State of origin may not be reviewed. The test of public policy referred to in point 1 of Article 34 may not be applied to the rules relating to jurisdiction.'

10 Article 38 of Regulation No 44/2001 provides:

'1. A judgment given in a Member State and enforceable in that State shall be enforced in another Member State when, on the application of any interested party, it has been declared enforceable there.'

2. However, in the United Kingdom, such a judgment shall be enforced in England and Wales, in Scotland, or in Northern Ireland when, on the application of any interested party, it has been registered for enforcement in that part of the United Kingdom.'

11 Article 45 of Regulation No 44/2001 provides:

'1. The court with which an appeal is lodged under Article 43 or Article 44 shall refuse or revoke a declaration of enforceability only on one of the grounds specified in Articles 34 and 35. It shall give its decision without delay.

2. Under no circumstances may the foreign judgment be reviewed as to its substance.'

National law

12 According to national legislation, the real property rights relating to those areas of the Republic of Cyprus in which the Government of that Member State does not exercise effective control ('the northern area') subsist and remain valid in spite of the invasion of Cypriot territory in 1974 by the Turkish army and the ensuing military occupation of part of Cyprus.

13 Pursuant to Article 21(2) of Law 14/60 on the courts, in the version applicable to the main proceedings, where an action concerns any matter relating to real property 'that action shall be brought before the Eparkhiako Dikastirio of the district in which such property is situated'.

14 By order of the Anotato Dikastirio tis Kipriakis Dimokratias (Supreme Court of the Republic of Cyprus) published on 13 September 1974 in the Episimi Efimerida tis Kipriakis Dimokratias (Official Journal of the Republic of Cyprus), that is after the invasion of the northern area, the territories of the districts of Kyrenia and Nicosia were reorganised.

15 Under Cypriot legislation, the service of a document instituting proceedings on one spouse by handing it to the other is good service. If the defendant does not enter an appearance in the 10 days following service of the document instituting proceedings the claimant may apply for a default judgment. Entering an appearance is an act which does not require the defendant to set out the nature of any defence.

16 In proceedings to set aside a default judgment the claimant is required to establish that he has an arguable defence.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

17 The proceedings before the referring court concern the recognition and enforcement in the United Kingdom, pursuant to Regulation No 44/2001, of two judgments of the Eparkhiako Dikastirio tis Lefkosias ('the judgments concerned') on an action brought against the Orams by Mr Apostolides concerning immovable property ('the land').

18 The land is situated at Lapithos, in the district of Kyrenia, which is in the northern area. It belonged to Mr Apostolides' family, which occupied it before the invasion of Cyprus by the Turkish army in 1974. As members of the Greek Cypriot community, Mr Apostolides' family was forced to abandon their house and take up residence in the area of the island effectively controlled by the Cypriot Government ('the Government-controlled area').

19 The Orams claim to have purchased the land in 2002 in good faith from a third party, the latter having himself acquired it from the authorities of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus, an entity which, to this day, has not been recognised by any State except the Republic of Turkey. The successive acquisitions were in accordance with the laws of that entity. The Orams built a villa and frequently occupy the property as their holiday home.

20 The movement of persons between the northern area and the Government-controlled area was restricted until April 2003.

21 On 26 October 2004, the Eparkhiako Dikastirio tis Lefkosias, a Cypriot court established in the Government-controlled area, issued the documents instituting proceedings in the action brought by Mr Apostolides against the Orams. On the same day, those documents, one for each spouse, were served at the property on the land by a process server from that court. The documents were both served by being handed in person to Mrs Orams who refused to sign for them.

22 The process server did not inform Mrs Orams that he was a process server or of the nature of the documents served by him, the documents being written in Greek, which the Orams do not understand. However, Mrs Orams understood that those documents were legal and official in nature.

23 On its face, written in Greek, each document stated that in order to prevent a default judgment from being given it was necessary to enter an appearance before the Eparkhiako Dikastirio tis Lefkosias within 10 days of service.

24 In spite of the difficulties encountered in finding in the northern area a Greek-speaking lawyer licensed to appear before the courts of the Government-controlled area, Mrs Orams managed to obtain the assistance of such a lawyer who agreed to enter an appearance on her behalf on 8 November 2004. However, the lawyer did not enter an appearance before that court on 8 November but only on the following day.

25 On 9 November 2004, as no one had entered an appearance for the Orams, the Eparkhiako Dikastirio tis Lefkosias gave a default judgment on Mr Apostolides' claim. On the same day, the court refused the authority presented by Mrs Orams' lawyer because it was written in English and not in Greek or Turkish.

26 According to the order for reference, the default judgment of the Eparkhiako Dikastirio tis Lefkosias orders the Orams to:

- demolish the villa, swimming pool and fencing which they had erected on the land,
  - deliver immediately to Mr Apostolides free possession of the land,
  - pay to Mr Apostolides various sums by way of special damages and monthly occupation charges (that is, rent) until the judgment was complied with, together with interest,
  - refrain from continuing with the unlawful intervention on the land, whether personally or through their agents, and
  - pay various sums in respect of the costs and expenses of the proceedings (with interest on those sums).
- 27 On 15 November 2004, the Orams applied to have the judgment set aside. After hearing evidence and arguments from the Orams and Mr Apostolides, the Eparkhiako Dikastirio tis Lefkosias dismissed the Orams' application by judgment of 19 April 2005 essentially on the ground that they had not put forward an arguable defence to dispute Mr Apostolides' title to the land. The Orams were ordered to pay the costs of the application.
- 28 The Orams appealed against the judgment rejecting their application to set aside the default judgment. The appeal was itself dismissed by judgment of the Anotato Dikastirio tis Kipriakis Dimokartias of 21 December 2006.
- 29 On 18 October 2005, Mr Apostolides produced the documents required in England to apply, pursuant to Regulation No 44/2001, for the recognition and enforcement of the judgments concerned. By order of 21 October 2005, a Master of the High Court of Justice (England and Wales), Queen's Bench Division, ordered that the judgments be enforceable in England pursuant to that regulation.
- 30 The Orams challenged that order under Article 43 of Regulation No 44/2001 and a High Court judge set it aside by order of 6 September 2006. Mr Apostolides appealed against that order before the referring court under Article 44 of that regulation.
- 31 In those circumstances, the Court of Appeal (England and Wales) (Civil Division) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:
- '1. ...
- Does the suspension of the application of the acquis communautaire in the northern area by Article 1(1) of Protocol No 10 ... preclude a Member State court from recognising and enforcing a judgment given by a court of the Republic of Cyprus sitting in the Government-controlled area relating to land in the northern area, when such recognition and enforcement is sought under [Regulation No 44/2001], which is part of the acquis communautaire?
2. Does Article 35(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 entitle or bind a Member State court to refuse recognition and enforcement of a judgment given by the courts of another Member State concerning land in an area of the latter Member State over which the Government of that Member State does not exercise effective control? In particular, does such a judgment conflict with Article 22 of Regulation No 44/2001?
3. Can a judgment of a Member State court, sitting in an area of that State over which the Government of that State does exercise effective control, in respect of land in that State in an area over which the Government of that State does not exercise effective control, be denied recognition or enforcement under Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 on the grounds that as a practical matter the judgment cannot be enforced where the land is situated, although the judgment is enforceable in the Government-controlled area of the Member State?
4. Where
- a default judgment has been entered against a defendant;
  - the defendant then commenced proceedings in the court of origin to challenge the default judgment; but
  - his application was unsuccessful following a full and fair hearing on the ground that he had failed to show any arguable defence (which is necessary under national law before such a judgment can be set aside),
- can that defendant resist enforcement of the original default judgment or the judgment on the application to set aside under Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001, on the ground that he was not served with the document which instituted the proceedings in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence prior to the entry of the original default judgment? Does it make a difference if the hearing entailed only consideration of the defendant's defence to the claim?
5. In applying the test in Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 of whether the defendant was "served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence" what factors are relevant to the assessment? In particular:
- (a) Where service in fact brought the document to the attention of the defendant, is it relevant to consider the actions (or inactions) of the defendant or his lawyers after service took place?
  - (b) What, if any, relevance would particular conduct of, or difficulties experienced by, the defendant or his lawyers have?
  - (c) Is it relevant that the defendant's lawyer could have entered an appearance before judgment in default was entered?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

The first question

- 32 By its first question, the referring court asks essentially whether the suspension of the application of the acquis communautaire in the northern area, provided for by Article 1(1) of Protocol No 10, precludes the application of Regulation No 44/2001 to a judgment which is given by a Cypriot court sitting in the Government-controlled area, but concerns land situated in the northern area.
- 33 It must be observed at the outset that the Act of Accession of a new Member State is based essentially on the general principle that the provisions of Community law apply ab initio and in toto to that State, derogations being allowed only in so far as they are expressly laid down by transitional provisions (see, to that effect, Case 258/81 Metallurgiki Halyps v Commission [1982] ECR 4261, paragraph 8).
- 34 In that regard, Protocol No 10 constitutes a transitional derogation from the principle set out in the preceding paragraph, based on the exceptional situation prevailing in Cyprus.
- 35 However, as the Advocate General observed, in point 35 of her Opinion, provisions in an Act of Accession which permit exceptions to or derogations from rules laid down by the EC Treaty must be interpreted restrictively with reference to the Treaty provisions in question and must be limited to what is absolutely necessary in order to attain its objective (see, by analogy, Case 231/78 Commission v United Kingdom [1979] ECR 1447, paragraph 13; Case 77/82 Peskeloglou [1983] ECR 1085, paragraph 12; Case 11/82 Piraiki-Patraiki and Others v Commission [1985] ECR 207, paragraph 26; Case C-3/87 Agegate [1989] ECR 4459, paragraph 39, and Case C-233/97 KappAhl [1998] ECR I-8069, paragraph 18).
- 36 In the case in the main proceedings, the derogation provided for by Protocol No 10 cannot be interpreted as meaning that it precludes the application of Regulation No 44/2001 to the judgments concerned given by the Cypriot court.
- 37 It follows from a literal interpretation of Article 1(1) of Protocol No 10 that the suspension for which it provides is limited to the application of the acquis communautaire in the northern area. However, in the case in the main proceedings, the judgments concerned, the recognition of which is sought by Mr Apostolides, were given by a court sitting in the Government-controlled area.
- 38 The fact that those judgments concern land situated in the northern area does not preclude the interpretation referred to in the preceding paragraph since, first, it does not nullify the obligation to apply Regulation No 44/2001 in the Government-controlled area and, second, it does not mean that that regulation must thereby be applied in the northern area (see, by analogy, Case C-281/02 Owusu [2005] ECR I-1383, paragraph 31).
- 39 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first question is that the suspension of the application of the acquis communautaire in the northern area, provided for by Article 1(1) of Protocol No 10, does not preclude the application of Regulation No 44/2001 to a judgment which is given by a Cypriot court sitting in the Government-controlled area, but concerns land situated in the northern area.

The second to fifth questions

- 40 As regards the second to fifth questions, it must be stated that the Commission invokes the possibility that the case does not fall within the material scope of Regulation No 44/2001. Such a conjecture thus makes it necessary to determine whether the case in the main proceedings may be regarded as a 'civil and commercial matter' for the purpose of Article 1 of that regulation.
- 41 In that connection, it is to be remembered that, in order to ensure, as far as possible, that the rights and obligations which derive from Regulation No 44/2001 for the Member States and the persons to whom it applies are equal and uniform, 'civil and commercial matters' should not be interpreted as a mere reference to the internal law of one or other of the States concerned. That concept must be regarded as an independent concept to be interpreted by referring, first, to the objectives and scheme of the regulation and, second, to the general principles which stem from the corpus of the national legal systems (see Case 29/76 LTU [1976] ECR 1541, paragraph 3; Case 814/79 Rüffer [1980] ECR 3807, paragraph 7; Case C-172/91 Sonntag [1993] ECR I-1963, paragraph 18; Case C-266/01 Préservatrice foncière TIARD [2003] ECR I-4867, paragraph 20; Case C-343/04 ČEZ [2006] ECR I-4557, paragraph 22, and Case C-292/05 Lechouritou and Others [2007] ECR I-1519, paragraph 29).
- 42 The autonomous interpretation of the concept of 'civil and commercial matters' results in the exclusion of certain judicial decisions from the scope of Regulation No 44/2001, by reason either of the legal relationships between the parties to the action or of the subject-matter of the action (see LTU, paragraph 4; Rüffer, paragraph 14; Préservatrice foncière TIARD, paragraph 21; ČEZ, paragraph 22, and Lechouritou and Others, paragraph 30).
- 43 Thus, the Court has held that, although certain actions between a public authority and a person governed by private law may come within the concept, it is otherwise where the public authority is acting in the exercise of its public powers (see LTU, paragraph 4; Rüffer, paragraph 8; Sonntag, paragraph 20; Préservatrice foncière TIARD, paragraph 22; and Lechouritou and Others, paragraph 31).
- 44 The exercise of public powers by one of the parties to the case, because it exercises powers falling outside the scope of the ordinary legal rules applicable to relationships between private individuals, excludes such a case from civil and commercial matters within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 (see, to that effect, LTU, paragraph 4; Rüffer, paragraphs 9 and 16; Sonntag, paragraph 22; Préservatrice foncière TIARD, paragraph 30; and Lechouritou and Others, paragraph 34).
- 45 In the case in the main proceedings, the action is between individuals, and its object is to obtain damages for unlawfully taking possession of land, the delivery up of that land, its restoration to its original state and the cessation of any other unlawful intervention. That action is brought not against conduct or procedures which involve an exercise of public powers by one of the parties to the case, but against acts carried out by individuals.
- 46 Consequently, the case at issue in the main proceedings must be regarded as concerning 'civil and commercial matters' within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Regulation No 44/2001.

The second question

- 47 By its second question, the referring court asks essentially whether the fact that a judgment is given by a court of a Member State, concerning land situated in an area of that State over which the Government of that State does not exercise effective control, may be regarded as an infringement of the rule of jurisdiction laid down in Article 22(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 and, therefore, justify a refusal to recognise or enforce such a judgment in accordance with Article 35(1) of that regulation.
- 48 In that connection, it must be held that Article 22 of Regulation No 44/2001 contains a mandatory and exhaustive list of the grounds of exclusive international jurisdiction of the Member States. That article merely designates the Member State whose courts have jurisdiction ratione materiae, but does not allocate jurisdiction within the Member State concerned. It is for each Member State to determine the organisation of its own courts.
- 49 Furthermore, the principle prohibiting the review of the jurisdiction of the court of the Member State of origin, laid down in Article 35(3) of Regulation No 44/2001 – such review being permitted only in relation to the provisions of Article 35(1) –, prevents a review of the domestic jurisdiction of the court of the Member State of origin concerned being conducted in the case in the main proceedings.
- 50 Therefore, the forum rei sitae rule provided for in Article 22(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 concerns the international jurisdiction of the courts of the Member States and not their domestic jurisdiction.
- 51 In the case in the main proceedings, it is common ground that the land is situated in the territory of the Republic of Cyprus and that, therefore, the rule of jurisdiction laid down in Article 22(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 has been observed. The fact that the land is situated in the northern area may possibly have an effect on the domestic jurisdiction of the Cypriot courts, but cannot have any effect for the purposes of that regulation.
- 52 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the second question is that Article 35(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 does not authorise the court of a Member State to refuse recognition or enforcement of a judgment given by the courts of another Member State concerning land situated in an area of the latter State over which its Government does not exercise effective control.

The third question

- 53 By its third question, the referring court asks essentially whether the fact that a judgment given by the courts of a Member State, concerning land situated in an area of that State over which its Government does not exercise effective control, cannot, as a practical matter, be enforced where the land is situated constitutes a ground for refusal of recognition or enforcement under Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001.
- Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001
- 54 According to Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, a judgment is not to be recognised if such recognition is manifestly contrary to public policy in the Member State in which recognition is sought. Article 45(1) of that regulation provides for the refusal of an enforcement order in the same circumstances.
- 55 As a preliminary point, it should be recalled that Article 34 of Regulation No 44/2001 must be interpreted strictly inasmuch as it constitutes an obstacle to the attainment of one of the fundamental objectives of that regulation (see Case C-414/92 Solo Kleinmotoren [1994] ECR I-2237, paragraph 20; Case C-7/98 Krombach [2000] ECR I-1935, paragraph 21, and Case C-38/98 Renault [2000] ECR I-2973, paragraph 26). With regard, more specifically, to the public-policy clause in Article 34(1) of the regulation, it may be relied on only in exceptional cases (see Case 145/86 Hoffmann [1988] ECR 645, paragraph 21; Case C-78/95 Hendrikman and Feyen [1996] ECR I-4943, paragraph 23; Krombach, paragraph 21, and Renault, paragraph 26).
- 56 While the Member States remain in principle free, by virtue of the proviso in Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, to determine, according to their own conceptions, what public policy requires, the limits of that concept are a matter of interpretation of that regulation (see Krombach, paragraph 22, and Renault, paragraph 27).
- 57 Consequently, while it is not for the Court to define the content of the public policy of a Member State, it is none the less required to review the limits within which the courts of a Member State may have recourse to that concept for the purpose of refusing recognition to a judgment emanating from another Member State (Krombach, paragraph 23, and Renault, paragraph 28).
- 58 In that connection, it must be observed that, by disallowing any review of a foreign judgment as to its substance, Articles 36 and 45(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 prohibit the court of the State in which enforcement is sought from refusing to recognise or enforce that judgment solely on the ground that there is a discrepancy between the legal rule applied by the court of the State of origin and that which would have been applied by the court of the State in which enforcement is sought had it been seised of the dispute. Similarly, the court of the State in which enforcement is sought cannot review the accuracy of the findings of law or fact made by the court of the State of origin (Krombach, paragraph 36, and Renault, paragraph 29).
- 59 Recourse to the public-policy clause in Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 can be envisaged only where recognition or enforcement of the judgment given in another Member State would be at variance to an unacceptable degree with the legal order of the State in which enforcement is sought inasmuch as it would infringe a fundamental principle. In order for the prohibition of any review of the foreign judgment as to its substance to be observed, the infringement would have to constitute a manifest breach of a rule of law regarded as essential in the legal order of the State in which enforcement is sought or of a right recognised as being fundamental within that legal order (see Krombach, paragraph 37, and Renault, paragraph 30).
- 60 In that connection, the court of the State in which enforcement is sought cannot, without undermining the aim of Regulation No 44/2001, refuse recognition of a judgment emanating from another Member State solely on the ground that it considers that national or Community law was misapplied in that judgment. On the contrary, it must be considered that, in such cases, the system of legal remedies in each Member State, together with the preliminary ruling procedure provided for in Article 234 EC, affords a sufficient guarantee to individuals (see Renault, paragraph 33). The public-policy clause would apply in such cases only where that error of law means that the recognition or enforcement of the judgment in the State in which enforcement is sought would be regarded as a manifest breach of an essential rule of law in the legal order of that Member State (see, to that effect, Renault, paragraph 34).

- 61 In the case in the main proceedings, as Mr Apostolides and the Cypriot and Greek Governments have observed, the referring court has not referred to any fundamental principle within the legal order of the United Kingdom which the recognition or enforcement of the judgments in question would be liable to infringe.
- 62 Accordingly, in the absence of a fundamental principle in the legal order of the United Kingdom which the recognition or enforcement of the judgments concerned would be liable to infringe, no refusal to recognise them, under Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, would be justified on the ground that a judgment given by the courts of a Member State, concerning land situated in an area of that State over which its Government does not exercise effective control, cannot, as a practical matter, be enforced where the land is situated. Similarly, there can be no refusal of enforcement on the basis of that provision, in accordance with Article 45(1) of that regulation.
- Article 38(1) of Regulation No 44/2001
- 63 Notwithstanding the foregoing considerations, it should be recalled that the Court has consistently held that, in the application of Article 234 EC, it may extract from the wording of the questions formulated by the national court, and having regard to the facts stated by the latter, those elements which concern the interpretation of Community law, for the purpose of enabling that court to resolve the legal problems before it (see Joined Cases C-330/90 and C-331/90 López Brea and Hidalgo Palacios [1992] ECR I-323, paragraph 5; Case C-224/01 Köbler [2003] ECR I-10239, paragraph 60; and Case C-346/05 Chateignier [2006] ECR I-10951, paragraph 18).
- 64 In the case in the main proceedings, although the fact that the judgments concerned cannot be enforced in the Member State of origin cannot justify the refusal to recognise or enforce those judgments, under Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, it remains the case that such a fact could be relevant for the purposes of Article 38(1) of that regulation.
- 65 Under the latter provision, a judgment given in a Member State and enforceable in that State is to be enforced in another Member State when, on the application of any interested party, it has been declared enforceable there.
- 66 Accordingly, the enforceability of the judgment in the Member State of origin is a precondition for its enforcement in the State in which enforcement is sought (see Case C-267/97 Coursier [1999] ECR I-2543, paragraph 23). In that connection, although recognition must have the effect, in principle, of conferring on judgments the authority and effectiveness accorded to them in the Member State in which they were given (see Hoffmann, paragraphs 10 and 11), there is however no reason for granting to a judgment, when it is enforced, rights which it does not have in the Member State of origin (see the Jenard Report on the Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters (OJ 1979 C 59, p. 48) or effects that a similar judgment given directly in the Member State in which enforcement is sought would not have.
- 67 However, in the case in the main proceedings, it cannot be reasonably argued that the judgments concerned are totally unenforceable in the Member State of origin.
- 68 These are judgments imposing obligations, in respect of which the certificate provided for in Article 54 of Regulation No 44/2001 declares the enforceability in the Member State of origin at the date on which the certificate was issued.
- 69 In that connection, it must be observed that Regulation No 44/2001 merely regulates the procedure for obtaining an order for the enforcement of foreign enforceable instruments and does not deal with execution itself, which continues to be governed by the domestic law of the court in which enforcement is sought (see Case 148/84 Deutsche Genossenschaftsbank [1985] ECR 1981, paragraph 18; Case 119/84 Capelloni and Aquilini [1985] ECR 3147, paragraph 16, and Hoffmann, paragraph 27), unless, for the purposes of the enforcement of a judgment, the application of the procedural rules of the Member State in which enforcement is sought may impair the effectiveness of the scheme laid down by the regulation as regards enforcement orders, by frustrating the principles laid down in that regard, whether expressly or by implication, by the regulation itself (see, to that effect, Capelloni and Aquilini, paragraph 21; Hoffmann, paragraph 29, and Case C-365/88 Hagen [1990] ECR I-1845, paragraph 20).
- 70 The fact that claimants might encounter difficulties in having judgments enforced in the northern area cannot deprive them of their enforceability and, therefore, does not prevent the courts of the Member State in which enforcement is sought from declaring such judgments enforceable.
- 71 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the third question is that the fact that a judgment given by the courts of a Member State, concerning land situated in an area of that State over which its Government does not exercise effective control, cannot, as a practical matter, be enforced where the land is situated does not constitute a ground for refusal of recognition or enforcement under Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 and it does not mean that such a judgment is unenforceable for the purposes of Article 38(1) of that regulation.

The fourth question

- 72 By its fourth question, the referring court asks essentially whether the recognition or enforcement of a default judgment may be refused under Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 by reason of the fact that the defendant was not served with the document instituting the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence, where he was able to commence proceedings to challenge that judgment before the courts of the Member State of origin.
- 73 In that connection, it is apparent from recitals 16 to 18 in the preamble to Regulation No 44/2001 that the system of appeals for which it provides against the recognition or enforcement of a judgment aims to establish a fair balance between, on the one hand, mutual trust in the administration of justice in the Union, which justifies judgments given in a Member State being, as a rule, recognised and declared enforceable automatically in another Member State and, on the other hand, respect for the rights of the defence, which means that the defendant should, where necessary, be able to appeal in an adversarial procedure against the declaration of enforceability if he considers one of the grounds for non-enforcement to be present.

- 74 The Court has had occasion, in Case C-283/05 ASML [2006] ECR I-12041, to make clear the differences between Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 and Article 27(2) of the Convention of 27 September 1968 on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters (OJ 1978 L 304, p. 36).
- 75 Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001, unlike Article 27(2) of the Convention, does not necessarily require the document which instituted the proceedings to be duly served, but does require that the rights of the defence are effectively respected (ASML, paragraph 20).
- 76 Under Articles 34(2) and 45(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, the recognition or enforcement of a default judgment must be refused, if there is an appeal, if the defendant was not served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence, unless the defendant failed to commence proceedings to challenge that judgment before the courts of the Member State of origin when it was possible for him to do so.
- 77 It is clear from the wording of those provisions that a default judgment given on the basis of a document instituting proceedings which was not served on the defendant in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence must be recognised if he did not take the initiative to appeal against that judgment when it was possible for him to do so.
- 78 A fortiori, the rights of the defence that the Community legislature wished to safeguard by Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 are respected where the defendant did in fact commence proceedings to challenge the default judgment and those proceedings enabled him to argue that he had not been served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with the equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence.
- 79 In the case in the main proceedings, it is common ground that the Orams commenced such proceedings in the Member State of origin to challenge the default judgment given on 9 November 2004. Consequently, Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 cannot legitimately be relied upon.
- 80 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the fourth question is that the recognition or enforcement of a default judgment cannot be refused under Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 where the defendant was able to commence proceedings to challenge the default judgment and those proceedings enabled him to argue that he had not been served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with the equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence.

The fifth question

- 81 Given the answer to the fourth question, there is no need to answer the fifth question.

Costs

- 82 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby rules:

- 1. The suspension of the application of the acquis communautaire in those areas of the Republic of Cyprus in which the Government of that Member State does not exercise effective control, provided for by Article 1(1) of Protocol No 10 on Cyprus to the Act concerning the conditions of accession [to the European Union] of the Czech Republic, the Republic of Estonia, the Republic of Cyprus, the Republic of Latvia, the Republic of Lithuania, the Republic of Hungary, the Republic of Malta, the Republic of Poland, the Republic of Slovenia and the Slovak Republic and the adjustments to the Treaties on which the European Union is founded, does not preclude the application of Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters to a judgment which is given by a Cypriot court sitting in the area of the island effectively controlled by the Cypriot Government, but concerns land situated in areas not so controlled.
- 2. Article 35(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 does not authorise the court of a Member State to refuse recognition or enforcement of a judgment given by the courts of another Member State concerning land situated in an area of the latter State over which its Government does not exercise effective control.
- 3. The fact that a judgment given by the courts of a Member State, concerning land situated in an area of that State over which its Government does not exercise effective control, cannot, as a practical matter, be enforced where the land is situated does not constitute a ground for refusal of recognition or enforcement under Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 and it does not mean that such a judgment is unenforceable for the purposes of Article 38(1) of that regulation.
- 4. The recognition or enforcement of a default judgment cannot be refused under Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 where the defendant was able to commence proceedings to challenge the default judgment and those proceedings enabled him to argue that he had not been served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with the equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

Case C-420/07

Meletis Apostolides
v
David Charles Orams
and Linda Elizabeth Orams

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Court of Appeal, London)

(Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 – Jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters – Application of the regulation to a judgment concerning land situated in an area of the Republic of Cyprus in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise effective control)

I – Introduction

1. Since the intervention of Turkish troops in 1974, the island of Cyprus has been effectively partitioned into a Greek Cypriot southern area and a Turkish Cypriot northern area. The Republic of Cyprus is recognised as a State in international law by the international community and although, de jure, it represents Cyprus as a whole, de facto it controls only the southern area of the island. In the northern area, the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus (TRNC), recognised only by Turkey, has become established. (2)

2. Although the negotiations on reunification, supported by the United Nations and the EU, could not be successfully concluded, the Republic of Cyprus acceded to the European Union in 2004. The application of the acquis communautaire to the areas of the island over which the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise sovereign jurisdiction was suspended by a separate Protocol to the Treaty of Accession.

3. In the course of partition, a large number of members of both ethnic groups fled or were displaced. Many displaced persons claim ownership of land which they were forced to vacate. (3) The land left by Greek Cypriots in the TRNC is deemed there to have passed to the State. The TRNC authorities have transferred many of those plots of land to private individuals. How displaced persons' property claims are to be dealt with is one of the unresolved issues in the negotiations on reunification.

4. The proceedings between Mr Apostolides and Mr and Mrs Orams, a British couple, are set in that sensitive context. The couple purchased a plot of land in northern Cyprus from a private vendor. Mr Apostolides, whose family was forced to leave the north, claims ownership of that land. In response to his claim, the District Court of Nicosia, a court in the Greek Cypriot area, ordered the Orams to vacate the land and to make various payments. Mr Apostolides applied for the recognition and enforcement of that judgment in the United Kingdom.

5. The Court of Appeal, which is the court dealing with the enforcement proceedings, now raises the question whether courts of the United Kingdom are obliged to do so under Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters. (4) Doubts exist in that regard, first, because the judgment relates to land in an area of Cyprus in which the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise sovereign jurisdiction and in which the application of Community law is therefore largely suspended. Secondly, there were irregularities in the service of the documents which instituted the proceedings at the Orams' place of residence in the Turkish Cypriot area.

II – Legal framework

A – Protocol No 10 on Cyprus

6. Protocol No 10 on Cyprus, (5) which is annexed to the Act of Accession of 2003, is worded as follows:

'THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES,

REAFFIRMING their commitment to a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem, consistent with relevant United Nations Security Council Resolutions, and their strong support for the efforts of the United Nations Secretary General to that end,

CONSIDERING that such a comprehensive settlement to the Cyprus problem has not yet been reached,

CONSIDERING that it is, therefore, necessary to provide for the suspension of the application of the acquis in those areas of the Republic of Cyprus in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise effective control,

CONSIDERING that, in the event of a solution to the Cyprus problem this suspension shall be lifted,

CONSIDERING that the European Union is ready to accommodate the terms of such a settlement in line with the principles on which the EU is founded,

CONSIDERING that it is necessary to provide for the terms under which the relevant provisions of EU law will apply to the line between the abovementioned areas and both those areas in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus exercises effective control and the Eastern Sovereign Base Area of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland,

DESIRING that the accession of Cyprus to the European Union shall benefit all Cypriot citizens and promote civil peace and reconciliation,

CONSIDERING, therefore, that nothing in this Protocol shall preclude measures with this end in view,

CONSIDERING that such measures shall not affect the application of the acquis under the conditions set out in the Accession Treaty in any other part of the Republic of Cyprus,

HAVE AGREED UPON THE FOLLOWING PROVISIONS:

Article 1

1. The application of the acquis shall be suspended in those areas of the Republic of Cyprus in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise effective control.

2. The Council, acting unanimously on the basis of a proposal from the Commission, shall decide on the withdrawal of the suspension referred to in paragraph 1.

Article 2

1. The Council, acting unanimously on the basis of a proposal from the Commission, shall define the terms under which the provisions of EU law shall apply to the line between those areas referred to in Article 1 and the areas in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus exercises effective control.

2. The boundary between the Eastern Sovereign Base Area and those areas referred to in Article 1 shall be treated as part of the external borders of the Sovereign Base Areas for the purpose of Part IV of the Annex to the Protocol on the Sovereign Base Areas of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Cyprus for the duration of the suspension of the application of the acquis according to Article 1.

Article 3

1. Nothing in this Protocol shall preclude measures with a view to promoting the economic development of the areas referred to in Article 1.

2. Such measures shall not affect the application of the acquis under the conditions set out in the Accession Treaty in any other part of the Republic of Cyprus.

Article 4

In the event of a settlement, the Council, acting unanimously on the basis of a proposal from the Commission, shall decide on the adaptations to the terms concerning the accession of Cyprus to the European Union with regard to the Turkish Cypriot Community.'

B – Regulation No 44/2001

7. Article 1(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 provides that the regulation is to apply to civil and commercial matters.

8. The provisions on jurisdiction are laid down in Chapter II of the regulation. Provisions on exclusive jurisdiction are contained in Section 6 of that chapter. In particular, Article 22 provides that, 'the following courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction, regardless of domicile:

1. in proceedings which have as their object rights in rem in immovable property or tenancies of immovable property, the courts of the Member State in which the property is situated. ...'

9. Articles 33 to 37 of the regulation deal with the recognition of judgments. Article 33 first establishes the principle that the judgments of the courts of another Member State are to be recognised without any special procedure being required. Articles 34 and 35 lay down the grounds on which recognition may, in exceptional cases, be refused.

10. The relevant passages of Article 34 are worded as follows:

'A judgment shall not be recognised:

1. if such recognition is manifestly contrary to public policy in the Member State in which recognition is sought;
2. where it was given in default of appearance, if the defendant was not served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence, unless the defendant failed to commence proceedings to challenge the judgment when it was possible for him to do so;

11. Article 35 deals with the significance of compliance with the rules of jurisdiction for the purposes of recognition:

'1. Moreover, a judgment shall not be recognised if it conflicts with Sections 3, 4 or 6 of Chapter II, or in a case provided for in Article 72.

3. Subject to the paragraph 1, the jurisdiction of the court of the Member State of origin may not be reviewed. The test of public policy referred to in point 1 of Article 34 may not be applied to the rules relating to jurisdiction.'

III – Facts, procedure and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12. Under the law of the Republic of Cyprus, Mr Apostolides is the owner of land in Lapithos (Lapta) in the district of Kyrenia (Girne), which is situated in the area of the Republic of Cyprus over which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise effective control. The Orams claim to have purchased that land from a third party in 2002. They constructed a villa on it, which they frequently occupy as a holiday home.

13. Mr Apostolides brought a claim in the District Court of Nicosia against Mr and Mrs Orams. On 26 October 2004, the court served writs on the defendants. The writs, on which the Orams' address in the United Kingdom was stated, were handed to Mrs Orams on the same day at the property in Lapta by a process server of the District Court of Nicosia. The process server did not identify himself as such, instead informing Mrs Orams that he was a 'messenger' and that he did not know what the papers were.

14. The writs were in the Greek language, which is not widely spoken in the northern area, but is one of the official languages of the Republic of Cyprus. The Orams do not understand Greek. Mrs Orams understood, however, that the documents were of a legal and official nature.

15. Under the law of the Republic of Cyprus, if the defendant does not enter appearance within 10 days of service of the document instituting proceedings, it is open to the claimant to apply for a default judgment. Attention was drawn to this on the face of the document in the Greek language. The entering of appearance is an act which does not involve setting out the nature of any defence.

16. According to her own account, on Friday 29 October 2004, Mrs Orams took the first steps towards finding a lawyer who could represent her. It was not until 2 November 2004 that she obtained an appointment for a consultation with the lawyer, Mr Liatsos. On that day, Mr Liatsos translated the document instituting proceedings for her in outline but told her that he was not able to act for her because he was not licensed to practise before the courts of the Republic of Cyprus. He advised Mrs Orams to consult Mr Osman, the lawyer who had acted in the purported purchase of the land, but he had retired. Mrs Orams was able to see his daughter, who had taken over his practice, on 3 November 2004. She informed Mrs Orams that she was not entitled to practise in the courts of the Republic. Mrs Orams was then referred to Mr Gunes Mentes.

17. It was not until Friday 5 November 2004 at 17.00 hrs that Mrs Orams was able to obtain an appointment with Mr Mentes, who, she claims, was one of the few lawyers in the northern area licensed to practise before the courts of the Republic of Cyprus and who had some understanding of the Greek language. Mrs Orams retained Mr Mentes to act on behalf of herself and her husband in the matter. Mr Mentes told Mrs Orams that he would attend at the District Court of Nicosia on the following Monday, 8 November 2004, to enter appearance.

18. Since no appearance was entered in the proceedings on behalf of the defendants on Tuesday, 9 November 2004, the court gave a default judgment against them, ordering that they:

- (1) demolish the villa, swimming pool and fencing which they had erected on the land,
- (2) deliver immediately to Mr Apostolides free possession of the land,
- (3) pay to Mr Apostolides various sums by way of special damages and monthly occupation charges (that is, rent) until the judgment was complied with, together with interest,
- (4) refrain from continuing with the unlawful intervention on the land, whether personally or through their agents, and
- (5) pay various sums in respect of the costs and expenses of the proceedings (with interest on those sums).

19. On 15 November 2004, appearances were entered in the proceedings and applications to set aside the default judgments were made on behalf of Mr and Mrs Orams.

20. Under the law of the Republic of Cyprus, in order to obtain the setting aside of a default judgment, the defendant must show an arguable defence to the claim against him. On 19 April 2005, after evidence and argument had been heard, the District Court of Nicosia held that there was no arguable defence to the claim. The Orams' appeal against that judgment was rejected by the Supreme Court of the Republic of Cyprus on 21 December 2006.

21. On 18 October 2005, Mr Apostolides applied under Regulation No 44/2001 for the enforcement of (i) the default judgment of 9 November 2004 and (ii) the judgment of the District Court of Nicosia of 19 April 2005. On 21 October 2005, a Master of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of England and Wales ordered that the judgments be enforceable in England.

22. The Orams brought a successful challenge against that order before a High Court Judge (Mr Justice Jack) under Article 43 of Regulation No 44/2001. Mr Apostolides contested that judgment by an appeal under Article 44 of Regulation No 44/2001 to the Court of Appeal which, by order of 19 June 2007 (received on 14 September 2007), referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

- '1. Does the suspension of the application of the acquis communautaire in the northern area by Article 1(1) of Protocol No 10 of the Act of Accession 2003 of Cyprus to the EU preclude a Member State court from recognising and enforcing a judgment given by a court of the Republic of Cyprus sitting in the Government-controlled area relating to land in the northern area, when such recognition and enforcement is sought under Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, which is part of the acquis communautaire?
2. Does Article 35(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 entitle or bind a Member State court to refuse recognition and enforcement of a judgment given by the courts of another Member State concerning land in an area of the latter Member State over which the Government of that Member State does not exercise effective control? In particular, does such a judgment conflict with Article 22 of Regulation No 44/2001?
3. Can a judgment of a Member State court, sitting in an area of that State over which the Government of that State does exercise effective control, in respect of land in that State in an area over which the Government of that State does not exercise effective control, be denied recognition or enforcement under Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 on the grounds that as a practical matter the judgment cannot be enforced where the land is situated, although the judgment is enforceable in the Government-controlled area of the Member State?
4. Where –
  - a default judgment has been entered against a defendant;
  - the defendant then commenced proceedings in the court of origin to challenge the default judgment; but
  - his application was unsuccessful following a full and fair hearing on the ground that he had failed to show any arguable defence (which is necessary under national law before such a judgment can be set aside),can that defendant resist enforcement of the original default judgment or the judgment on the application to set aside under Article 34(2) of Regulation 44/2001, on the ground that he was not served with the document which instituted the proceedings in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence prior to the entry of the original default judgment? Does it make a difference if the hearing entailed only consideration of the defendant's defence to the claim.?
5. In applying the test in Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 of whether the defendant was "served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence" what factors are relevant to the assessment? In particular:
  - (a) Where service in fact brought the document to the attention of the defendant, is it relevant to consider the actions (or inactions) of the defendant or his lawyers after service took place?
  - (b) What, if any, relevance would particular conduct of, or difficulties experienced by, the defendant or his lawyers have?
  - (c) Is it relevant that the defendant's lawyer could have entered an appearance before judgment in default was entered?'

23. In the proceedings before the Court, Mr Apostolides, Mr and Mrs Orams, the Greek, Polish and Cypriot Governments and the Commission of the European Communities submitted observations.

IV – Legal assessment

A – The first question

24. By the first question, the Court of Appeal wishes to know whether the suspension of the application of the acquis communautaire in the northern area of Cyprus pursuant to Article 1(1) of Protocol No 10 precludes the recognition and enforcement under Regulation No 44/2001 of a judgment relating to claims to the ownership of land situated in that area.

25. In answering this question, attention must first be drawn to the difference between the territorial scope of Regulation No 44/2001 and the reference area of proceedings or judgments in respect of which the regulation lays down provisions.

26. Under Article 299 EC, the territorial scope of Community law corresponds to the territory of the Member States with the exception of certain regions specified in that provision. However, the provisions of Title IV of Part Three of the EC Treaty concerning the area of freedom, security and justice apply to the United Kingdom, Ireland and Denmark only as provided for in Article 69 EC in conjunction with the Protocols cited in that article. On that basis, the United Kingdom and Ireland opted for the application of Regulation No 44/2001 and Denmark opted against it. (6) The regulation therefore applies in the United Kingdom and, subject to Protocol No 10, in the Republic of Cyprus.

27. Regulation No 44/2001 regulates, first, the jurisdiction of courts within its territorial scope and, secondly, the recognition and enforcement of judgments of those courts in a Member State other than that in which the judgment was given. However, the regulation contains no provisions on the recognition and enforcement of judgments from non-member States in the Community or of judgments of the courts of Member State in non-member States.

28. It is necessary to differentiate the territorial scope of Regulation No 44/2001 from its reference area, that is, the area to which judgments of a court of a Member State, which are to be recognised and enforced under the regulation, may relate. The reference area is broader than the territorial scope and also covers non-member States. The regulation therefore also applies to proceedings which include a non-member-country element.

29. This was confirmed by the Court in Owusu (7) and in its Opinion on the Lugano Convention. (8) According to that case-law, a relevant international element for the purposes of the application of the regulation may also exist by virtue of the place of occurrence of the events at issue in a non-Contracting State. (9) The regulation is intended to eliminate obstacles to the functioning of the internal market which may derive from disparities between national legislations on international jurisdiction and on the recognition and enforcement of judgments given by foreign courts. In the Court's view, those disparities have a detrimental effect on the internal market even when they concern judgments which have a bearing only on a non-member State. (10)

30. It must now be ascertained what effect Protocol No 10 has with regard to the scope and reference area of Regulation No 44/2001.

31. There is no dispute between the parties that the suspension of the application of the acquis communautaire in those areas of the Republic of Cyprus in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise effective control, provided for in Article 1(1) of the Protocol, restricts the territorial scope of Regulation No 44/2001. Consequently, the recognition and enforcement of a judgment of a court of a Member State in the northern area of Cyprus cannot be based on the regulation. Nor does it appear possible, under the regulation, for a judgment of a court situated in that area of Cyprus to be recognised and enforced in another Member State.

32. However, the dispute before the Court of Appeal does not involve either of those situations. Rather, it is required to rule on the application for the enforcement in the United Kingdom of a judgment of a court situated in the area controlled by the Government of the Republic of Cyprus. The restriction of the territorial scope of Regulation No 44/2001 by Protocol No 10 does not, therefore, affect the present case.

33. Mr and Mrs Orams alone take the view that the Protocol also precludes the application of the regulation to judgments which were given within its territorial scope and are also intended to be recognised and enforced there, but which concern a legal relationship with a bearing on the parts of the country not controlled by the Government of the Republic of Cyprus.

34. As the other parties point out, the wording of Article 1(1) of the Protocol of itself precludes such an interpretation. That provision states that the acquis communautaire is to be suspended in that area and not in relation to that area.

35. In addition, it is settled case-law that provisions in an Act of Accession which permit exceptions to or derogations from rules laid down by the Treaty must be interpreted restrictively with reference to the Treaty provisions in question and must be limited to what is absolutely necessary. (11)

36. Even though the suspension of the acquis communautaire does not, in this case, directly concern primary Community legislation, but Regulation No 44/2001, that observation can be applied to it. It is true that, in terms of the hierarchy of norms, the Act of Accession (including the Protocols) is to prevail over secondary legislation. However, the regulation is ultimately intended to achieve the objectives of the EC Treaty itself. (12)

37. Accordingly, Article 65 EC, on which Regulation No 44/2001 is based, expressly grants authority to adopt measures for the improvement and simplification of the recognition and enforcement of decisions in civil and commercial cases, including decisions in extrajudicial cases, in so far as necessary for the proper functioning of the internal market. Indeed, the clear delimitation of the jurisdiction of the courts in the Community together with the recognition and enforcement of judgments promotes the exercise of the fundamental freedoms. It facilitates the enforcement of claims in connection with cross-border supplies of goods, provision of services or capital transfers as well as the exercise of the freedom of movement for persons.

38. Protocol No 10 must therefore be interpreted as meaning that the suspension of the application of Regulation No 44/2001 is to be limited to what is absolutely necessary. In particular, in this regard, the meaning and purpose of the Protocol must be borne in mind.

39. It is the shared view of the parties that the suspension of the acquis communautaire is intended to enable the Republic of Cyprus to accede to the EU even though the negotiations on reunification could not be successfully concluded beforehand. The intention is to avoid a situation in which the Republic of Cyprus, as a Member State, infringes Community law because it is effectively in no position to apply the provisions of the acquis throughout its national territory.

40. As the Commission in particular points out, however, it was not the intention to exclude the application of all provisions of Community law with a bearing on areas under the control of the Turkish Cypriot community. Accordingly, Article 3(1) of the Protocol provides that the suspension of the acquis communautaire is not to preclude measures with a view to promoting the economic development of the areas referred to. (13) In addition, on the basis of Article 2 of the Protocol, rules for the movement of goods and persons between the different areas were laid down by Council Regulation (EC) No 866/2004. (14)

41. Those rules do not conflict with the Protocol's objective of enabling the Republic of Cyprus to accede to the Union notwithstanding the limited effective control over its national territory, but rather promote the growing together of the two parts of the country.

42. The abovementioned objective of the Protocol does not require the suspension of the application of Regulation No 44/2001 in the situation at issue in this case either. In particular, the recognition and enforcement of the judgments of the District Court of Nicosia in the United Kingdom does not give rise to any unenforceable obligations for the Republic of Cyprus in relation to Northern Cyprus which bring it into conflict with Community law. On the contrary, only the courts in the United Kingdom are required to act.

43. Mr and Mrs Orams refer, however, to the Protocol's further objective of bringing about a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem, consistent with relevant United Nations Security Council resolutions, (15) which is enunciated, in particular, in recital 1 in the preamble to the Protocol. The judgment of the District Court of Nicosia at issue anticipates a comprehensive settlement of property questions. Its recognition and enforcement would therefore conflict with the objectives of the Protocol and of the relevant United Nations resolutions.

44. However, that objection cannot have the effect of generally disapplying Regulation No 44/2001 in Member States whenever judgments of a Member State court contain references to the northern area of Cyprus.

45. It is certainly true that the Security Council has repeatedly called for the preservation of peace in Cyprus and of the country's territorial integrity. In that context, the international community has also made calls to refrain from any action which might exacerbate the conflict. (16) However, it is not possible to infer from those rather general appeals any obligation to refrain from recognising judgments of Greek Cypriot courts which relate to claims to ownership of land in the Turkish Cypriot area.

46. Moreover, it is by no means clear that, taken overall, the application of the regulation exacerbates the Cyprus conflict. It may equally well have the opposite effect and promote the normalisation of economic relations. It is precisely because the line between the two areas of Cyprus has been opened up for the movement of goods and persons (17) that it is possible to envisage many different legal relationships in which the recognition and enforcement in other Member States of judgments given by courts of the Republic of Cyprus and the application of the rules on jurisdiction in the regulation are also of interest to parties residing in the northern area.

47. Consequently, it is also a matter of dispute between the parties as to whether the recognition and enforcement of the judgment at issue here would be detrimental or conducive to a final settlement of the property questions. Accordingly, Mr Apostolides submits that the sale of expropriated land in the TRNC to nationals of other Member States makes its restitution in the course of a subsequent consensual solution more difficult. If people in his position could enforce claims by reason of ownership of such land in other Member States, that would deter potential acquirers.

48. It is not necessary here to determine definitively what effect the suspension of the application of the regulation to cases involving elements with a bearing on northern Cyprus has on the political process for resolving the conflict. The application of the regulation cannot be made dependent on such complex political assessments. That would be contrary to the principle of legal certainty, respect for which is one of the objectives of the regulation. (18) Accordingly, the rules of jurisdiction in the regulation must enable, in a clearly predictable manner, the court having jurisdiction to be determined. (19) Furthermore, the claimant in proceedings before a court of a Member State must be able to foresee with sufficient certainty whether, on the basis of the regulation, a judgment concluding proceedings is enforceable in another Member State, in so far as none of the grounds for non-enforcement provided for in the regulation is present.

49. Mr Apostolides goes even further. He submits that the application of Regulation No 44/2001 is necessary in order to take account of the requirements of the Loizidou judgment of the European Court of Human Rights. (20)

50. In that and other decisions, the European Court of Human Rights has held that the expropriations carried out following the occupation of northern Cyprus are invalid and do not call into question the ownership positions of displaced refugees. (21) The denial of access to and use of the property is therefore in breach of Article 1 of Protocol No 1 to the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) and the right to respect for the home (Article 8(1) of the ECHR), in so far as the persons concerned own a home on the land. (22) However, the European Court of Human Rights has also recently acknowledged that the Immovable Property Commission established in the meantime by the TRNC satisfies, in principle, the requirements of the ECHR; it nevertheless awarded the applicant in the proceedings themselves compensation for the infringement of her rights under the ECHR. (23)

51. In this regard, it must first be observed that none of the judgments cited related to the situation of Mr Apostolides himself. There is therefore no existing finding by the European Court of Human Rights concerning his specific property claims which would have to be complied with directly.

52. At the most, it would have to be considered whether the right to a fair hearing and to effective legal protection, embodied in Article 6(1) of the ECHR, actually requires that the judgment of the District Court of Nicosia, which directly concerns the claims of Mr Apostolides, be enforced. (24) However, the European Court of Human Rights has until now, so far as is apparent, recognised such a right only in relation to enforcement in the State where the judgment was given. (25) Whether Article 6(1) of the ECHR also makes the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments obligatory can remain an open question here, since Regulation No 44/2001 is, for the reasons set out, applicable in any case and confers a corresponding right. In any event, Article 6(1) of the ECHR would not lead to any result other than an appropriate application of the regulation consistent with respect for human rights.

53. In conclusion, the first question should be answered as follows:

The suspension of the application of the acquis communautaire in the areas of the Republic of Cyprus in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise effective control, provided for in Article 1(1) of Protocol No 10 to the Act of Accession of 2003, does not preclude a court of another Member State from recognising and enforcing, on the basis of Regulation No 44/2001, a judgment given by a court of the Republic of Cyprus involving elements with a bearing on the area not controlled by the Government of that State.

B – Second to fifth questions

54. By the second to fifth questions, the Court of Appeal requests the interpretation of Articles 35(1) and 34(1) and (2) of Regulation No 44/2001 with regard to possible grounds for non-recognition and non-enforcement within the meaning of those provisions. Before those questions can be answered, it must be established whether this case falls within the scope of the regulation. The Commission has expressed doubts as to whether this case is a civil and commercial matter within the meaning of Article 1(1) of the regulation.

1. Preliminary observation on the scope of the regulation

55. It is true that the Commission acknowledges that the dispute between Mr Apostolides and Mr and Mrs Orams is a dispute between private parties. However, it submits that it should be placed in a wider context and that account should be taken of the fact that the disputes over land owned by displaced Greek Cypriot refugees have their origin in the military occupation of northern Cyprus.

56. In the Commission's view, it accords with international practice to assign the resolution of individual property disputes following armed conflicts to specialised institutions, as was provided for by the Annan Plan for the reunification of Cyprus. After the failure of that plan, the TRNC enacted legislation satisfying the requirements of the European Court of Human Rights (26) for the settlement of compensation claims and established an Immovable Property Commission. The claims to restitution of property and compensation for denial of its use, which that legislation covers, come under public law.

57. The Commission submits that, when applying Regulation No 44/2001, it should be borne in mind that an alternative legal remedy which accords with the ECHR is available. Article 71(1) of the regulation provides that it is not to affect any conventions which, in relation to particular matters, govern jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments. The compensation regime introduced under the supervision of the European Court of Human Rights can be construed as such a convention.

58. Attention should first be drawn in this connection to the settled case-law that 'civil and commercial matter' is an independent concept to be interpreted by referring, first, to the objectives and scheme of Regulation No 44/2001 or of the Brussels Convention and, second, to the general legal principles which stem from the corpus of the national legal systems. (27)

59. Only actions between a public authority and a person governed by private law fall outside the scope of the Brussels Convention, and only in so far as that authority is acting in the exercise of public powers. (28) Thus, the Lechouritou case, (29) to which the Commission refers, concerned the legal action brought by a private individual against the Federal Republic of Germany in respect of the damage suffered as a result of war crimes committed by the German armed forces.

60. In this case, however, Mr Apostolides is not making any claims for restitution or compensation against a government authority, but a civil claim for restitution of land and further claims connected with loss of enjoyment of the land against Mr and Mrs Orams.

61. Those claims do not alter in nature as a result of the possibility that Mr Apostolides may have alternative or additional claims under public law outstanding against the TRNC authorities. There is therefore no need here to decide whether those alternative or additional claims did in fact already exist when, by litigation before the District Court of Nicosia, Mr Apostolides obtained the judgment whose enforcement is now sought. (30)

62. It is true that the Court has held that the fact that an action is brought on the basis of a claim which arises from an act in the exercise of public powers is sufficient for that action, whatever the nature of the proceedings afforded by national law for that purpose, to be excluded from the scope of the Brussels Convention. (31) It could be considered in that regard that the interference with property has its origins in the measures taken by the Turkish armed forces and/or the TRNC authorities. However, that finding by the Court applies only to an action between a public authority and a person governed by private law. (32)

63. Where there are multiple relationships involving a party who is a public authority and a person governed by private law, as well as only parties governed by private law, it is necessary to take into account the legal relationship between the parties to the dispute, the basis of the action brought and the detailed rules governing the bringing of that action. (33) In the main action, a private applicant is asserting claims governed by private law against other private persons before a civil court, so that, on the basis of all the relevant circumstances, the action is clearly a civil law dispute.

64. It would probably be possible to exclude such civil claims by means of a provision of national or international law and to confine the parties concerned solely to a claim for restitution or compensation against the State. That could mean that access to the civil courts would no longer be available.

65. However, the Republic of Cyprus has clearly not availed itself of that possibility. Nor, as yet, is there any equivalent agreement under international law. In any event, the District Court of Nicosia and the subsequent courts did not refer to any such exclusion of civil claims or of recourse to the civil courts in their judgments. Even if this was erroneous in point of law, the Court of Appeal ought not, in principle, in enforcement proceedings, to review either the jurisdiction of the District Court of Nicosia (Article 34(3) of Regulation No 44/2001) or the substantive lawfulness of the judgment whose recognition is sought (Articles 36 and 45(2) of the regulation).

66. The Commission, however, appears to take the view that the exclusion of civil claims has occurred, as it were, by operation of international law, since the TRNC has enacted compensation legislation approved, in principle, by the European Court of Human Rights.

67. I cannot agree with that reasoning.

68. The Xenides-Arestis III judgment, (34) in which the European Court of Human Rights took a positive view of the compatibility of the compensation regime with the ECHR, gives no indication that the legislation in question validly excludes the prosecution of civil claims under the law of the Republic of Cyprus. On the contrary, the European Court of Human Rights expressly rejected the argument that the applicant was obliged to bring the matter of compensation before the Immovable Property Commission, and instead itself awarded her compensation. (35)

69. It is also doubtful whether a different view would be tenable. That is because, in the absence of international recognition of the TRNC, the European Court of Human Rights itself denies the expropriations made by the TRNC any legal validity in principle. (36) It merely recognises that certain provisions adopted by internationally non-recognised State entities can be regarded as valid so as to avoid disadvantages for the population concerned. (37) To argue that the compensation scheme validly precludes civil claims at the expense of the persons concerned and without agreement with the Republic of Cyprus would be going far beyond that. (38)

70. The Commission's argument that, pursuant to Article 71(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, the regulation is overridden by the compensation scheme approved by the European Court of Human Rights is also untenable.

71. That provision states that the regulation is not to affect 'any conventions to which the Member States are parties and which in relation to particular matters, govern jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments'.

72. The TRNC's compensation scheme, the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights concerning it and even the ECHR itself clearly do not fall within that definition. While the ECHR is a convention, it does not lay down any specific provisions on jurisdiction or the recognition or enforcement of judgments in respect of particular legal fields which fall within the scope of the regulation. The unilateral provisions of the TRNC are not a convention. Moreover, the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights regarding them say nothing about the recognition and enforcement of civil judgments.

73. It must therefore be concluded that the judgment whose recognition is sought in the main proceedings concerns a civil matter within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 and thus falls within the scope of the regulation.

2. The second question

74. The second question seeks to ascertain whether Article 35(1) in conjunction with Article 22(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 entitles or binds a Member State court to refuse recognition and enforcement of a judgment given by the courts of another Member State concerning land in an area of the latter Member State over which the Government of that Member State does not exercise effective control.

75. Before answering this question, it should be noted that, according to recitals 2, 6, 16 and 17 in its preamble, the regulation seeks to ensure the free movement of judgments from Member States in civil and commercial matters by simplifying the formalities with a view to their rapid and simple recognition and enforcement. (39)

76. In accordance with that objective, Article 33(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 provides that a judgment given in a Member State is to be recognised in the other Member States without implementing any special procedure. Recognition may be refused only in the circumstances specified in Articles 34 and 35.

77. Pursuant to Article 38(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, a judgment given in a Member State and enforceable in that State is to be enforced in another Member State when, on the application of any interested party, it has been declared enforceable there. Article 45(1) of the regulation likewise entitles the court before which an appeal is brought to refuse a declaration of enforceability only on the grounds specified in Articles 34 and 35.

78. In that regard, Article 35(3) of the regulation establishes the principle that the jurisdiction of the court of the State of origin of the judgment may not be reviewed. Under Article 35(1), an exception applies with regard to infringement of the rules allocating exclusive jurisdiction to certain courts, including the rule specifying the jurisdiction of the courts of the place where immovable property is situated, laid down in Article 22(1) of the regulation.

79. Under Article 22(1), in proceedings which have as their object rights in rem in immovable property or tenancies of immovable property, the courts of the Member State in which the property is situated are to have exclusive jurisdiction, regardless of domicile. That provision would be infringed, for the purposes of Article 35(1), if the judgment concerned rights in rem in land situated, not in the State of origin, the Republic of Cyprus, but in another Member State.

80. As Mr Apostolides, the Greek and Cypriot Governments and the Commission correctly submit, under international law the Republic of Cyprus is the only recognised State on the island of Cyprus. (40) Its territory also includes the northern area of the island, in which the land at issue in this case is situated. (41) The TRNC, which effectively controls that area, has not been recognised by any other State apart from Turkey. (42) It follows from Protocol No 10 that the Contracting States to the Act of Accession also regarded the north of Cyprus as part of the territory of the Republic of Cyprus and therefore as part of the acceding territory. Otherwise it would have been unnecessary to suspend the application of the common acquis in that part of the island.

81. The judgment in regard to which the referring court is required to decide whether to issue a declaration of enforceability relates at least partly (43) to rights in rem, namely the ownership of land situated in the Republic of Cyprus. On a literal interpretation of Article 22(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, there is therefore no doubt as to the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of that Member State.

82. However, Mr and Mrs Orams submit that the meaning and purpose of the provision preclude that conclusion.

83. According to settled case-law, the essential reason for the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of the State where the property is situated is that a court of the place where property is situated is best placed to deal with matters relating to rights in rem in immovable property. (44) Such matters must generally be decided by applying the law of the State where the property is situated. They also frequently require an on-the-spot investigation of the facts. The assignment of exclusive jurisdiction to the court of the place where the property is situated, for reasons of proximity, therefore satisfies the need for the proper administration of justice. (45)

84. The Orams infer from this that Article 22(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 must be interpreted restrictively and does not accord jurisdiction to the courts of the Republic of Cyprus for actions in connection with rights in land in the northern area. In the absence of effective control over that area, the courts of the Republic of Cyprus do not in fact have the advantage of particular proximity.

85. Whether that view, which finds no support in the wording of the provision, is correct can, in the final analysis, remain open. Article 22(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 would be infringed only if, instead of the courts of the Republic of Cyprus, the courts of another Member State were to have jurisdiction by virtue of the place where the property is situated. It is not apparent which Member State that should be. Leaving aside its position under international law, the highest that can be said of the TRNC is that it should be treated in the same way as a non-member State. However, on that premise, since Article 22(1) does not directly confer any exclusive jurisdiction on courts of a non-member State, that provision itself cannot be infringed.

86. It is admittedly disputed in academic writings whether Article 22(1) produces a 'reflex effect' in favour of non-member States. (46) However, the Court appears to reject such an effect. Accordingly, in the Lugano Opinion, it stated that the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of the place where immovable property is situated in a non-member country overrides the jurisdiction, under Article 2 of the regulation, of the courts of a defendant's place of residence only because the Lugano Convention contains a provision identical to Article 22 of the regulation; it is only under the regulation that the appropriate forum remains the courts of the place of residence in the Community. (47)

87. It would in any case be wrong to allow such a reflex effect to apply also in relation to Article 35(1) of Regulation No 44/2001. It follows from the interaction of Article 35(1) and (3) that the refusal of recognition and enforcement on account of infringement of the rules of jurisdiction is permissible only in exceptional circumstances. The scope of Article 35(1) must therefore not be extended by also allowing encroachment on the jurisdiction of courts in non-member States which are not parties to the Lugano Convention to become a ground for non-recognition.

88. For the sake of completeness, mention should be made of the consequences which would ensue if the TRNC – contrary to the view taken here – were to be treated analogously to a non-member State. The courts of the Republic of Cyprus would then not have exclusive jurisdiction under Article 22(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 for disputes in connection with land situated in the TRNC. The general rules of jurisdiction would therefore come into operation. Whether or not the District Court of Nicosia actually had jurisdiction under those rules (48) would, under Article 35(3) of the regulation, have no bearing on the recognition and enforcement of its judgment.

89. The answer to the second question must therefore be that Article 35(1) in conjunction with Article 22(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 does not entitle a Member State court to refuse recognition and enforcement of a judgment given by the courts of another Member State concerning land in an area of the latter Member State over which the Government of that Member State does not exercise effective control.

3. The third question

90. The third question concerns the interpretation of the public policy proviso in Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001. The referring court asks whether recognition and enforcement of a judgment must be refused on the basis of that proviso where that judgment cannot in practice be enforced in the State where the judgment was given itself, because it relates to land in an area of that State over which the Government of that State does not exercise effective control.

91. Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 provides that a judgment must not be recognised if such recognition is manifestly contrary to public policy in the Member State in which recognition is sought.

92. In the leading case of Krombach, (49) the Court held that Article 27 of the Brussels Convention – the predecessor to Article 34 of Regulation No 44/2001 – must be interpreted strictly. The provision constitutes an obstacle to the attainment of one of the fundamental objectives of the Convention, which is to create an autonomous and complete system which ensures the free movement of judgments in the Community. More specifically, recourse to the public policy clause in Article 27, point 1, of the Brussels Convention is therefore to be had only in exceptional cases. (50)

93. The Court drew from that the following conclusion: (51)

'Recourse to the clause on public policy in Article 27, point 1, of the Convention can be envisaged only where recognition or enforcement of the judgment delivered in another Contracting State would be at variance to an unacceptable degree with the legal order of the State in which enforcement is sought inasmuch as it infringes a fundamental principle. In order for the prohibition of any review of the foreign judgment as to its substance to be observed, the infringement would have to constitute a manifest breach of a rule of law regarded as essential in the legal order of the State in which enforcement is sought or of a right recognised as being fundamental within that legal order.'

94. Finally, the Court further held that, while the Contracting States remain free in principle, by virtue of the proviso in Article 27, point 1, of the Brussels Convention, to determine according to their own conception what public policy requires, the limits of that concept are a matter of interpretation of the Convention. (52) Consequently, while it is not for the Court to define the content of the public policy of a Contracting State, it is none the less required to review the limits within which the courts of a Contracting State may have recourse to that concept for the purpose of refusing recognition of a judgment emanating from another Contracting State. (53)

95. In the light of those findings, it must be examined whether the factual non-enforceability of a judgment in the State where it was given can be regarded as a manifest contravention of public policy, as referred to in Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, precluding recognition and enforcement in another Member State.

96. As the Greek Government and the Commission correctly point out, the enforceability of a judgment in the State where it was given is already, under Article 38(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, a condition for a declaration of enforceability by a court of another Member State. An enforceable instrument should therefore not have a more far-reaching effect in the State in which enforcement is sought than in the State of origin. (54)

97. In Coursier, (55) the Court interpreted the corresponding passage in Article 31 of the Brussels Convention to the effect that the term 'enforceable' refers solely to the enforceability, in formal terms, of foreign decisions and not to the circumstances in which such decisions may be executed in the State of origin. Formal enforceability is lacking if an appeal has been lodged against or still lies from the judgment and the judgment has not been declared provisionally enforceable.

98. It would be inconsistent with the objective of Regulation No 44/2001 of ensuring the free movement of judgments by simple recognition and enforcement (56) if the declaration of enforceability were to be dependent on the factual conditions for the enforcement of the judgment in the State of where it was given. Unlike enforceability in the formal sense, a certificate of the kind referred to in Article 54 of the regulation would not automatically make it possible to confirm, in particular, whether and under what conditions a judgment is enforceable in practice in the State where it was given. Moreover, factual grounds for non-enforcement do not in any way alter the legal effect of the judgment.

99. This case itself illustrates the potential imponderables which taking into account factual enforceability would entail. It is true that some of the claims legally enforceable by execution are currently not enforceable in Cyprus, since the Republic of Cyprus is unable to exercise sovereignty in the area in which the land concerned is situated. On the other hand, enforcement of the pecuniary claims would be perfectly possible in the part of the island controlled by the Republic of Cyprus, in so far as the Orams have assets at their disposal there, such as credit balances with banks or other receivables.

100. Since the enforceability of the foreign judgment in the State of origin as a condition for a declaration of enforceability by the courts of another Member State is laid down definitively in Article 38(1) of the regulation, the same condition cannot be taken up with a different meaning in the context of the public policy proviso. Following this line of thought, the second sentence of Article 35(3) of Regulation No 44/2001, for example, also expressly precludes lack of jurisdiction, which under Article 35 may not be reviewed, from nevertheless being considered as a contravention of public policy of the kind referred to in Article 34(1).

101. The Commission and also, taking up its line of reasoning, the Orams additionally raise the question as to whether a different ground of public policy may be put forward against enforcement. They submit that the recognition and enforcement of the District Court of Nicosia's judgment may contravene 'international public policy' by undermining the efforts of the international community to find a solution to the Cyprus problem.

102. It should first be noted in this regard that the referring court itself did not consider any such ground for refusing recognition and enforcement in the United Kingdom. In principle, the Court is bound by the subject-matter of the reference for a preliminary ruling, which the referring court has determined in its order for reference. The parties are normally not authorised to submit additional questions to the Court which go beyond that subject-matter. (57)

103. That is particularly true with regard to the interpretation of the concept of 'public policy' in Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, since it is a matter for the Member States to determine according to their own conception what public policy requires. (58) There is also the fact that the United Kingdom Government has not participated in these proceedings. The Court therefore lacks any reliable information as to whether the grounds raised by the Commission are to be regarded as public policy in that Member State.

104. However, the Commission expressly relies on international public policy. It does concede that Article 34(1) takes into account only public policy in the Member State in which recognition of the judgment is sought. In its view, however, there is no reason why grounds of international public policy should not at the same time also be regarded as national public policy.

105. Should the Court find it appropriate to discuss this aspect, although it is not the subject-matter of the reference for a preliminary ruling, I would make the following observations in regard to it.

106. In Krombach, the Court regarded it as its task to review the limits within which the courts of a Contracting State to the Brussels Convention may have recourse to the concept of public policy for the purpose of refusing recognition of a judgment emanating from a court in another Contracting State. (59) Since fundamental rights, as enunciated in the ECHR, form an integral part of the general principles of law, it concluded that a court of a Member State is entitled to refuse recognition of a foreign judgment which was arrived at in manifest breach of fundamental rights. (60)

107. To that extent, the Court has thus, it is true, established a link between the fundamental rights protected by the ECHR at international level and national public policy. Refusal of recognition of a foreign judgment will therefore satisfy the requirements of Article 34(1) of the regulation, in any event where the requirements of national public policy are used as a basis for remedying a manifest infringement of the fundamental rights embodied in the ECHR.

108. It has not yet been definitively ascertained whether the courts are not only entitled, but even bound, to refuse enforcement of a foreign judgment which manifestly infringes Community fundamental rights. Support for such a position is to be found in the fact that, according to settled case-law, the national courts are bound by fundamental rights when they are dealing with a situation which falls within the scope of Community law. (61)

109. In this case, however, the Commission does not contend that the judgment whose enforcement is sought infringes fundamental rights. In its view, the issue is instead the requirements of international policy regarding the Cyprus problem. Those requirements have to a certain extent acquired legally binding status in so far as they have become established in United Nations Security Council resolutions. (62) That applies, for example, to the obligation on States to refrain from any action which might exacerbate the Cyprus conflict.

110. The preservation of peace and the restoration of the territorial integrity of Cyprus are certainly noble causes. However, whether those goals can be regarded as a 'rule of law regarded as essential in the legal order of the State in which enforcement is sought or of a right recognised as being fundamental within that legal order' within the meaning of the Krombach case-law (63) is extremely doubtful.

111. As already observed, however, the requirements and appeals contained in the Security Council resolutions on Cyprus are in any case much too general to permit the inference of a specific obligation not to recognise any judgment given by a court of the Republic of Cyprus relating to property rights in land situated in northern Cyprus. Apart from that, it is also by no means clear whether recognition of the judgment in the present context would be beneficial or detrimental to solving the Cyprus problem and whether it is even necessary for the protection of the fundamental rights of Mr Apostolides. (64)

112. The answer to the third question must therefore be that a court of a Member State may not refuse recognition and enforcement of a judgment on the basis of the public policy proviso in Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 because the judgment, although formally enforceable in the State where it was given, cannot be enforced there for factual reasons.

4. The fourth question

113. The fourth question seeks to ascertain whether recognition of a default judgment can be refused, in accordance with Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001, on account of irregularities in the service of document which instituted the proceedings, where the judgment has been reviewed in proceedings instituted by the defendant to challenge it.

114. Under Article 34(2), a judgment is not to be recognised if the defendant was not served with the document which instituted the proceedings in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence. However, under that provision, such irregularities in service cannot be pleaded where the defendant failed to commence proceedings to challenge the default judgment when it was possible for him to do so.

115. In this case, the Orams did in fact commence proceedings to challenge the default judgment before the District Court of Nicosia. Their appeal was dismissed after a full and fair court hearing, on the ground that they had no arguable defence to the claim. They nevertheless plead a number of circumstances in connection with the service of the statement of claim which made it more difficult for them to arrange for their defence in due time, and refer in that regard to the case-law on Article 27(2) of the Brussels Convention. (65)

116. In ASML, (66) however, the Court drew attention to the differences between Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 and Article 27(2) of the Brussels Convention. Under Article 27(2) of the Brussels Convention, a judgment is not to be recognised 'where it was given in default of appearance, if the defendant was not duly served with the document which instituted the proceedings ... in sufficient time to enable him to arrange for his defence'.

117. By contrast, under Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001, whether the document which instituted the proceedings is duly served is not necessarily the decisive factor. (67) Rather, what matters is that the rights of the defence are effectively respected. If the defendant failed to commence proceedings to challenge the judgment when it was possible for him to do so, Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 now presumes that the rights of the defence have been respected notwithstanding the irregularities in service.

118. Consequently, the case-law cited in relation to Article 27(2) of the Brussels Convention is not applicable to Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001. (68)

119. The new version of the provision takes greater account of the objective of facilitating the recognition and enforcement of judgments, but without undermining the right to a fair hearing, which, according to settled case-law, is one of the fundamental rights whose observance the Court ensures. (69)

120. In this case, the Orams had the opportunity of commencing proceedings to challenge the default judgment of the District Court of Nicosia, and they availed themselves of that opportunity. That being so, it is clear from Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 that recognition and enforcement cannot be refused, especially not on the basis of irregularities in the service of the writ.

121. That is true in any event where the right to a fair hearing is not undermined because of particular circumstances, such as the organisation of the appeal proceedings. However, there are no indications in the main proceedings that that right was undermined. According to the findings of the referring court, the Orams were able to put forward their legal arguments in full and fair court proceedings. Yet a further appeal, to the Supreme Court, against the judgment on the first challenge was even available, which the Orams – albeit unsuccessfully – lodged.

122. The fact that, under Cypriot law, the defendant must put forward an arguable defence in order to obtain the setting aside of a default judgment likewise did not, so far as is apparent, significantly undermine the Orams' rights as defendants. Nor, pursuant to Article 36 and Article 45(2) of the regulation, may the fact that they were unable to convince the Cypriot courts dealing with the substance of the case of their legal arguments be taken into consideration in the proceedings for recognition and enforcement.

123. The answer to the fourth question should therefore be that Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 is to be interpreted as meaning that recognition and enforcement of a default judgment may not be refused by reference to irregularities in the service of the document which instituted the proceedings if it was possible for the defendant, who initially failed to enter an appearance, to commence proceedings to challenge the default judgment, if the courts of the State where the judgment was given then reviewed the judgment in full and fair proceedings and if there are no indications that the defendant's right to a fair hearing was infringed in those proceedings.

5. The fifth question

124. In view of the answer to the fourth question, there is no need to answer the fifth question.

V – Conclusion

125. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the replies to the questions referred by the Court of Appeal should be as follows:

1. The suspension of the application of the acquis communautaire in those areas of the Republic of Cyprus in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise effective control, provided for in Article 1(1) of Protocol No 10 to the Act of Accession of 2003, does not preclude a court of another Member State from recognising and enforcing, on the basis of Regulation No 44/2001, a judgment given by a court of the Republic of Cyprus involving elements with a bearing on the area not controlled by the government of that State.
2. Article 35(1) in conjunction with Article 22(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 does not entitle a Member State court to refuse recognition and enforcement of a judgment given by a court of another Member State concerning land in an area of the latter Member State over which the Government of that Member State does not exercise effective control.
3. A court of a Member State may not refuse recognition and enforcement of a judgment on the basis of the public policy proviso in Article 34(1) of Regulation No 44/2001 because the judgment, although formally enforceable in the State where it was given, cannot be enforced there for factual reasons.
4. Article 34(2) of Regulation No 44/2001 is to be interpreted as meaning that recognition and enforcement of a default judgment may not be refused by reference to irregularities in the service of the document which instituted the proceedings, if it was possible for the defendant, who initially failed to enter an appearance, to commence proceedings to challenge the default judgment, if the courts of the State where the judgment was given then reviewed the judgment in full and fair proceedings, and if there are no indications that the defendant's right to a fair hearing was infringed in those proceedings.

48. However, under Article 2(1) of Regulation No 44/2001, jurisdiction at the defendant's place of residence would be a possibility. To what extent the holiday home in Lapta can be regarded as a further place of residence in addition to the place of residence in the United Kingdom is governed, pursuant to Article 59(1) of the regulation, by the internal law of the Member State where the court is situated. However, because of the location of the place of residence in Northern Cyprus, a similar problem exists here as with the application of Article 22(1).

In the view of Advocate General Léger, it is clear from the origin of Regulation No 44/2001 that the new version was specifically intended to overcome the consequences arising from the case-law cited in relation to Article 27(2) of the Brussels Convention (see Opinion in ASML, cited in footnote 39, point 51 et seq.).
69. See ASML, cited in footnote 39, paragraph 23 et seq.

Reference for a preliminary ruling from Court of Appeal (Civil Division) (England and Wales) made on 13 September 2007 - Meletis Apostolides v David Charles Orams, Linda Elizabeth Orams (Case C-420/07)

Language of the case: English

Referring court

Court of Appeal (Civil Division) (England and Wales)

Parties to the main proceedings

Applicant: Meletis Apostolides

Defendants: David Charles Orams, Linda Elizabeth Orams

Questions referred

1. In this question, the term "the Government-controlled area" refers to the area of the Republic of Cyprus over which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus exercises effective control; and the term "the northern area" refers to the area of the Republic of Cyprus over which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise effective control.

Does the suspension of the application of the acquis communautaire in the northern area by Article 1(1) of Protocol No 10 of the Act of Accession 2003 of Cyprus to the EU preclude a Member State Court from recognising and enforcing a judgment given by a Court of the Republic of Cyprus sitting in the Government-controlled area relating to land in the northern area, when such recognition and enforcement is sought under Council Regulation (EC) No 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters<sup>1</sup> ("Regulation 44/2001"), which is part of the acquis communautaire?

Does Article 35(1) of Regulation 44/2001 entitle or bind a Member State court to refuse recognition and enforcement of a judgment given by the Courts of another Member State concerning land in an area of the latter Member State over which the Government of that Member State does not exercise effective control? In particular, does such a judgment conflict with Article 22 of Regulation 44/2001?

3. Can a judgment of a Member State court, sitting in an area of that State over which the Government of that State does exercise effective control, in respect of land in that State in an area over which the Government of that State does not exercise effective control, be denied recognition or enforcement under Article 34(1) of Regulation 44/2001 on the grounds that as a practical matter the judgment cannot be enforced where the land is situated, although the judgment is enforceable in the Government-controlled area of the Member State?

4. Where - a default judgment has been entered against a defendant; the defendant then commenced proceedings in the Court of origin to challenge the default judgment; but his application was unsuccessful following a full and fair hearing on the ground that he had failed to show any arguable defence (which is necessary under national law before such a judgment can be set aside), can that defendant resist enforcement of the original default judgment or the judgment on the application to set aside under Article 34(2) of Regulation 44/2001, on the ground that he was not served with the document which instituted the proceedings in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence prior to the entry of the original default judgment? Does it make a difference if the hearing entailed only consideration of the defendant's defence to the claim.

5. In applying the test in Article 34(2) of Regulation 44/2001 of whether the defendant was "served with the document which instituted the proceedings or with an equivalent document in sufficient time and in such a way as to enable him to arrange for his defence" what factors are relevant to the assessment? In particular:

Where service in fact brought the document to the attention of the defendant, is it relevant to consider the actions (or inactions) of the defendant or his lawyers after service took place?

What if any relevance would particular conduct of, or difficulties experienced by, the defendant or his lawyers have?

(c) Is it relevant that the defendant's lawyer could have entered an appearance before judgment in default was entered?
